“Minnesota Nice” Not Enough, Says Report Being Released at April 2 Press Conference

Laws and policies exclude and create fear for refugees and immigrants

What: Press conference to release groundbreaking report, “Moving from Exclusion to Belonging: Immigrant Rights in Minnesota Today,” detailing current laws and policies that create a climate of exclusion and fear and setting forth recommendations for sound public policy. The report covers a variety of policy areas, including public safety, access to justice, economic opportunity, employer exploitation, education, housing, and civic engagement and political participation.

When: Wed., April 2, 11:00 a.m.

Where: Room 125, Minnesota State Capitol

Who: The Advocates for Human Rights, a Minnesota-based non-profit, conducted over a two-year period more than 200 interviews and 25 community conversations throughout the state.

Those participating in the press conference include:

Robin Phillips, executive director, The Advocates for Human Rights
Sen. Patricia Torres Ray, Minnesota Senate, District 63
Alondra Cano, Minneapolis City Council Member
Jovita Morales, community organizer, Mesa Latina
Mohamud Mumin, artist
Arnie Bigbee, Edina Human Rights Commission member

The Blandin Foundation, The Minneapolis Foundation, and the Andrus Family Fund provided support for the project.

When it comes to Minnesota’s immigrants and refugees, “Minnesota Nice” doesn’t come close to providing the most basic protections of people’s human rights, according to Moving from Exclusion to Belonging: Immigrant Rights in Minnesota Today, a groundbreaking report being released April 2 by Minnesota-based The Advocates for Human Rights.

In addition to delving into the challenges and abuses of immigrants and refugees, Moving from Exclusion to Belonging identifies what is working to promote integration and success, what is failing, and what gaps exist in public policy. The report also sets forth recommendations for policymakers and others.

“While immigrants and refugees reported finding Minnesota a ‘welcoming’ place, they also reported experiencing significant human rights violations,” said Robin Phillips, executive director of The Advocates for Human Rights.

In Minnesota, immigrants and refugees live in a state plagued by some of the nation’s worst racial disparities in the areas of employment, health, civic engagement, and educational outcomes, according to the Minnesota Department of Health 2014 report, Advancing Health Equity in Minnesota: Report to the Legislature. Immigrants and refugees with legal status often remain ineligible for public safety net programs, and they face difficulty establishing new lives in Minnesota due to lack of credit history, recognized credentials, or social and professional networks. Parents and teachers struggle to communicate while schools tackle the challenge of educating a student population that speaks more than 230 languages at home, according to the Minnesota Department of Education.

As an example of exclusion and discrimination, The Advocates' report points to the Minnesota law enacted in 2005 making labor trafficking a criminal offense that remains unused. Yet, reports of exploitation of undocumented workers—including wage theft, false imprisonment, assault, and trafficking—continue to surface.

Also, federal immigration policies and programs create conditions for due process violations and for racial profiling by local law enforcement to fester, Phillips said. As an example, she points to the fact that Minnesota law does not allow drivers licenses for those who cannot prove their lawful presence in the United States, creating a whole host of challenges for people and for the entire community.

More than two years in the making, the report draws on more than 200 interviews and 25 community conversations held throughout the state.

“While the Advocates for Human Rights specifically documented the experiences and perceptions of refugees and immigrants in this report, it recognizes that experiences highlight – and indeed have been allowed to occur because of – the longstanding failure to protect the human rights of all Minnesotans regardless of race,” said Phillips.
